Nurses Notes

Type 2 diabetes in children

The rate of type 2 diabetes continues to increase in youth and is closely associated with increasing obesity rates.

Obesity increases the risk of type 2 diabetes by causing insulin resistance. This occurs when organs and tissues do not respond appropriately to insulin and do not absorb enough sugar from the blood.

To slow this trend, the American diabetes association recommends that all kids get sixty minutes of exercise a day plus engage in strength training a few times a week. Encourage kids to play outside and engage in sports, and limit time spent in front of a screen. This may mean cutting back on video games, television, and similar devices.

A child's diet should contain limited amounts of added sugars and simple carbohydrates. Breads and pastries made with white flour may be problematic, and the diet should instead include plenty of fruits, vegetables, lean proteins, and whole grains. This will lower the risk of obesity and type 2 diabetes.
